The baseball season has just about wrapped up, concluding Jeff's sixth season behind the microphone (or more accurately, wearing the headset) for the Lancaster JetHawks. While it was a tough season on the field, Jeff was once again rated by the Los Angeles Daily News as one of the best play-by-play broadcasters in L.A. He is ranked ahead of the radio voices of the Dodgers, Angels, Clippers, UCLA and USC.

With baseball winding down, Jeff has been pulling double duty by preparing for football season. There is always a myriad of things that need to be done to get ready to change sports. Since he can't be on hand to watch practices and scrimmages at Montana State, he pays close attention to newspaper articles and makes frequent phone calls back to Bozeman to keep up with the latest news. Then there is also the drudgery of moving-packing, cleaning, and setting up utilities so that once Jeff arrives at his abode on Main Street in Bozeman, he can focus on the first broadcast of the season, Thursday, September 1 when the Bobcats take on the University of Utah.
